1 IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF *AMICUS CURIAE

2 Americans United for Separation of Church and State is a national, 3 nonsectarian and nonpartisan public-interest organization that is committed to 4 preserving the constitutional principles of religious freedom and the separation of 5 religion and government. Americans United has long fought to uphold the guarantees 6 of the First Amendment’s Religion Clauses that government must not favor, disfavor, 7 or punish based on religion or belief, and therefore that religious accommodations 8 must not license maltreatment of, or otherwise detrimentally affect, third parties.

9 INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

10 California, along with most of the world, continues to face a devastating 11 pandemic. The United States has suffered the most COVID-19-related deaths 12 worldwide (see Christina Maxouris & Eric Levenson, US coronavirus death toll 13 passes 80,000 as states move to phased reopening, CNN (May 11, 2020), 14 <https://cnn.it/2WOXvUz>), and the virus continues to pose a dire threat to California 15 and its people (see Luke Money, et al., ‘Second Wave’ of coronavirus could be far 16 worse for California than the first, officials warn, L.A. TIMES (Apr. 22, 2020), 17 <https://lat.ms/2YTwzpv>).

18 This emergency demands decisive action from leaders at all levels of 19 government. In California, that response includes the orders challenged by Abiding 20 Place Ministries: Executive Order N-33-20 issued by Governor Newsom on March 21 19 (Am. Compl., ECF No. 22, Ex. A), the April 9 and April 27 orders of the Health
22 Officer of the County of San Diego (id. Ex. B), and the March 19 Order of the State 23 Public Health Officer (id. Ex. C). Under these orders, residents are temporarily 24 required to remain in their homes, gatherings are temporarily prohibited, and non-25 essential businesses are temporarily closed to the extent that they cannot be operated 26 remotely. See id. Ex. A ¶ 1; Ex. B ¶¶ 2–3. Evidence suggests that the measures taken 27 by California officials have saved many lives. See Rong-Gong Lin II et al., Social 28

1 Distancing may have Helped California Slow the Virus and Avoid New York's Fate, 2 L.A. Times (Mar. 31, 2020), <https://lat.ms/2VSbYih>. But continued success depends 3 in part on continued compliance, and Abiding Place's desire to host gatherings 4 cannot be safely accommodated during this time of emergency.

5 Though Abiding Place is temporarily required to host church gatherings 6 remotely or as drive-in services rather than in person, its religious-exercise rights 7 have not been violated. The Supreme Court explained in Employment Division v.
8 Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 878–79 (1990), and Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye v. City of 9 Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 531 (1993), that neutral, generally applicable laws reflecting 10 no discriminatory intent toward religion do not violate the Free Exercise Clause of 11 the First Amendment. The challenged orders comply with this legal standard. Indeed, 12 the orders would be valid even if heightened review under the compelling-interest 13 test were called for—which it is not—because the challenged public-health measures 14 are narrowly tailored to advance the compelling governmental interest in protecting 15 California residents from a deadly disease.

16 What is more, far from invalidating the orders, the Establishment Clause 17 forbids granting Abiding Place's desired religious exemption from them. For if 18 government imposes harms on third parties when it exempts religious exercise from 19 the requirements of the law, it impermissibly favors the benefited religion and its 20 adherents over the rights, interests, and beliefs of nonbeneficiaries. See, e.g., Estate 21 of Thornton v. Caldor, Inc., 472 U.S. 703, 709–10 (1985). Holding that religious 22 gatherings must be exempted from the challenged orders would do just that: A single 23 contagious person at such a gathering can infect scores of fellow congregants, who 24 may then expose family, friends, and strangers, including countless people who did 25 not attend the event.

26 For reasons similar to those set forth here, the overwhelming majority of courts 27 to consider religion-based challenges to COVID-19-related orders have rejected 28

1 them. And the Ninth Circuit recently denied a request for an injunction pending 2 appeal in a challenge to Governor Newsom’s order and analogous local orders in 3 Riverside and San Bernardino Counties. See Gish v. Newsom, No. 20-55445, ECF
4 No. 21 (9th Cir. May 7, 2020). Abiding Place’s motion should be denied.

5 ARGUMENT

6 I. The Challenged Orders Do Not Violate The Free Exercise Clause Of 7 The First Amendment.

8 A. Rational-basis review applies to the orders.

9 The freedom to worship is a value of the highest order, and many people 10 naturally seek the comfort and support provided by faith communities in these 11 difficult times. But the legal guarantees of religious freedom do not provide (and 12 never have provided) an absolute right to engage in conduct consistent with one’s 13 religious beliefs. E.g., Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 166–67 (1944). Yet 14 Abiding Place argues that the Free Exercise Clause entitles it to an exemption from 15 California’s and San Diego’s emergency public-health measures in the face of a 16 severe pandemic. That claim is wrong as a matter of law: “The right to practice 17 religion freely does not include liberty to expose the community . . . to a 18 communicable disease.” Id.

19 The Supreme Court’s Free Exercise jurisprudence makes clear that while 20 government cannot forbid a religious practice because it is religious, religion-based 21 disagreement with the law does not excuse noncompliance. As Justice Scalia wrote 22 for the Court, “[t]o permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious 23 belief superior to the law of the land,” which would “in effect . . . permit every 24 citizen to become a law unto himself.” Smith, 494 U.S. at 879 (quoting Reynolds v.
25 United States, 98 U.S. 145, 166–67 (1879)). The Supreme Court has therefore held 26 that laws that place burdens on religious conduct are constitutionally permissible—27
28

1 and need satisfy only rational-basis review—when they apply generally and are 2 neutral toward religion. Lukumi, 508 U.S. at 531; Smith, 494 U.S. at 879.

3 The neutrality requirement means that a law must not “infringe upon or restrict 4 practices because of their religious motivation.” Lukumi, 508 U.S. at 533 (emphasis 5 added). The Free Exercise Clause thus bars discrimination against religion both 6 facially and through “religious gerrymanders” that target specific religious conduct.
7 Id. at 534. General applicability is the closely related concept (id. at 531) that 8 government, “in pursuit of legitimate interests, cannot in a selective manner impose 9 burdens only on conduct motivated by religious belief” (id. at 543). In other words, 10 government cannot restrict religious conduct while allowing substantial “nonreligious 11 conduct that endangers [the asserted governmental] interests in a similar or greater 12 degree.” Id. The touchstone in both inquiries is whether the government has 13 discriminated against religious conduct. See id. at 533–34, 542–43.

14 The challenged public-health orders have in no sense discriminated against 15 religious conduct but instead apply to religious and secular activities equally. See 16 Am. Compl., Ex. A ¶ 1 (ordering “all individuals” to stay at home except as needed 17 to maintain critical infrastructure or for essential activities); id. Ex. B ¶ 3 (ordering 18 all nonessential businesses to remain closed). Nor is their general applicability 19 undermined by their exceptions for essential activities such as obtaining medical care 20 at a hospital or food at a grocery store. “All laws are selective to some extent” and 21 need not be universal to be generally applicable. See Lukumi, 508 U.S. at 542. And 22 the exempted activities further California’s interest in protecting public health by 23 ensuring that people can obtain items essential to health and survival. See Stormans, 24 Inc. v. Selecky (Stormans I), 586 F.3d 1109, 1134–35 (9th Cir. 2009) (exemptions 25 that directly or indirectly further governmental interest at issue do not undermine 26 general applicability). Moreover, the defined categories of essential activities draw 27 no distinctions based on religious views or motivations: Hospitals and shelters, for 28

1 example, may remain open (Am. Compl., Ex. D at 1, 11) regardless of whether they 2 have a religious affiliation. See Ungar v. N.Y.C. Hous. Auth., 363 F. App'x 53, 56 (2d 3 Cir. 2010) (exceptions to public-housing policy did not negate general applicability 4 because they were equally available to religious and nonreligious applicants).

5 Simply put, “the right of free exercise does not relieve an individual of the 6 obligation to comply with a ‘valid and neutral law of general applicability on the 7 ground that the law proscribes (or prescribes) conduct that his religion prescribes (or 8 proscribes).” Smith, 494 U.S. at 879 (quoting United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 9 263 n.3 (1982) (Stevens, J., concurring in the judgment)). Here, the orders “prescribe 10 and proscribe the same conduct for all, regardless of motivation,” and are therefore 11 neutral and generally applicable. Stormans, Inc. v. Wiesman (Stormans II), 794 F.3d 12 1064, 1077 (9th Cir. 2015). Abiding Place’s religious beliefs do not afford a 13 constitutional excuse from compliance.

14 B. The challenged public-health measures would withstand even a 15 compelling-interest test.

16 Even if a compelling-interest test were to apply to Abiding Place’s religious-17 exercise claims, as it did in Free Exercise Clause cases before the Smith decision, 18 Abiding Place’s challenge would still fail. More than a century of constitutional 19 jurisprudence demonstrates that neutral restrictions on religious exercise tailored to 20 containing contagious diseases withstand even a compelling-interest test.

21 Before its decision in Smith in 1990, the Supreme Court interpreted the Free 22 Exercise Clause to require application of a compelling-interest standard whenever 23 religious exercise was substantially burdened by governmental action. See, e.g., 24 Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 407 (1963); see also 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb(b) 25 (purpose of federal Religious Freedom Restoration Act was “to restore the 26 compelling interest test as set forth in” Sherbert and Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S.
27 205 (1972)). But even the Court’s pre-Smith free-exercise decisions routinely denied 28

1 religious exemptions from laws that protected public health from serious threats, as 2 the challenged public-health measures do here. For government has a compelling 3 interest in protecting the health and safety of the public, and that interest is 4 undeniable when it comes to preventing the spread of an infectious disease that puts 5 lives at risk. See Sherbert, 374 U.S. at 402–03; accord Yoder, 406 U.S. at 230 & 6 n.20.

7 “[P]owers on the subject of health and quarantine [have been] exercised by the 8 states from the beginning.” Compagnie Francaise de Navigation a Vapeur v. La. Bd.
9 Of Health, 186 U.S. 380, 396–97 (1902). On that basis, the Supreme Court more than 10 a century ago upheld a mandatory-vaccination law aimed at stopping the spread of 11 smallpox. See Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 (1905) (citing “the 12 authority of a state to enact quarantine laws and ‘health laws of every description’”).
13 The Court straightforwardly rejected the idea that the Constitution barred compulsory 14 measures to protect health, citing the “fundamental principle” that personal liberty is 15 subject to some restraint “in order to secure the . . . health . . . of the state.” Id. at 26 16 (quoting Hannibal & St. J.R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U.S. 465, 471 (1877)).

17 Following incorporation of the Free Exercise Clause against the states in 18 Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296 (1940), the Supreme Court relied on Jacobson 19 to reaffirm that state public-health measures burdening religious exercise withstand a 20 compelling-interest test. See Sherbert, 374 U.S. at 402–03 (citing mandatory 21 vaccinations in Jacobson as example of burden on religion that is permissible under 22 compelling-interest test); Yoder, 406 U.S. at 230; see also Prince, 321 U.S. at 166– 23 67. And lower federal courts have routinely recognized that the “state’s wish to 24 prevent the spread of communicable diseases clearly constitutes a compelling 25 interest.” Workman v. Mingo City Bd. of Educ., 419 F. App’x 348, 353–54 (4th Cir.
26 2011); accord McCormick v. Stalder, 105 F.3d 1059, 1061 (4th Cir. 1997) (“[T]he 27 prison’s interest in preventing the spread of tuberculosis, a highly contagious and 28

1 deadly disease, is compelling.”); see also Whitlow v. California, 203 F. Supp. 3d 2 1079, 1089–90 (S.D. Cal. 2016) (collecting cases). Here, Abiding Place concedes, as 3 it must, that “the Governor and the County are pursuing a compelling interest of the 4 highest order through [their] efforts to contain the current pandemic.” Mot. for Inj. at 5 6.

6 The only remaining component of a compelling-interest test (were such a test 7 to apply) would ask whether the challenged orders are narrowly tailored to address 8 the applicable governmental interest. E.g., Globe Newspaper Co. v. Super. Ct., 457 9 U.S. 596, 607 (1982). Even “[a] complete ban can be narrowly tailored . . . if each 10 activity within the proscription’s scope is . . . appropriately targeted.” Frisby v.
11 Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 485 (1988); see Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 628–29 12 (1984) (holding that a complete ban on gender discrimination is narrowly tailored to 13 combating evil of gender discrimination). Accordingly, the U.S. Supreme Court (see 14 Jacobson, 197 U.S. at 26–27) and many other federal and state courts (see, e.g., 15 Whitlow, 203 F. Supp. 3d at 1089–90 (collecting cases)) have concluded that blanket 16 prohibitions on refusing immunizations satisfy a compelling-interest test.

17 The public-health measures here operate in the same way. No vaccine for 18 COVID-19 yet exists, and hospitals nationwide have experienced “severe shortages 19 of testing supplies and extended waits for test results.” See U.S. Dep’t of Health & 20 Human Servs., Office of the Inspector General, OEI-06-20-00300, Hospital
21 Experiences Responding to the COVID-19 Pandemic (Apr. 2020), 22 <https://bit.ly/3fjvLjt>, at 3. Without the capacity to test comprehensively for the virus, 23 Abiding Place’s assertions that its members do not believe that they have COVID-19 24 (e.g., Am. Compl. ¶ 40) are of no moment, as California and its counties cannot 25 safely limit restrictions to those who have actually been able to be tested and have 26 received a positive diagnosis.

1 Temporarily limiting in-person gatherings is the only way for California and 2 San Diego to achieve their compelling objective of saving lives. And the orders are 3 no broader than necessary to ensure that the targeted activities—physical gatherings
4 that create opportunities for transmission of the virus—are curtailed. At the same 5 time, the orders are carefully tailored to restrict religious activities only as necessary 6 to achieve that goal: Places of worship may remain open and people may seek 7 spiritual fulfillment there, including through “drive-in” religious services.

8 C. The vast majority of courts to consider similar challenges to 9 COVID-19 orders have rejected them.

10 For reasons similar to those set forth above, numerous courts around the 11 country have rejected challenges like this one to in-person-gathering restrictions and 12 stay-at-home orders. For example, the Eastern District of California held that 13 challenged state and local orders “are permissible exercises of emergency police 14 powers especially given the extraordinary public health emergency facing the State.”
15 See Cross Culture Christian Center v. Newsom, __ F. Supp. 3d __, No. 2:20-cv-832-
16 JAM-CKD, 2020 WL 2121111, at *5–7 (E.D. Cal. May 5, 2020) (denying TRO).
17 The Central District of California held that because challenged state and local “orders 18 apply to both religious and secular gatherings, they do not discriminate, and are 19 therefore facially neutral.” Gish v. Newsom, No. 5:20-cv-755, 2020 WL 1979970, at 20 *5–6 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 23, 2020), motion for injunction pending appeal denied, No.
21 20-55445, ECF No. 21 (9th Cir. May 7, 2020). The Northern District of Illinois 22 rejected the attempt to equate prohibited religious gatherings, which “seek to promote 23 conversation and fellowship,” to exempted essential retail activities, explaining that 24 there “are many examples where religious services have accelerated the pathogen’s 25 spread.” Cassell v. Snyders, __ F. Supp. 3d __, 2020 WL 2112374, at *6–11 (N.D.
26 Ill. May 3, 2020) (denying TRO and preliminary injunction), appeal docketed, No.
27 20-1757 (7th Cir. May 6, 2020). And the Eastern District of Virginia held that a 28

1 plaintiff church had “not shown that it is being disparately targeted as compared to 2 more similar gatherings [than essential retail stores] such as birthday parties, book 3 clubs, group fitness classes, secular marriage celebrations, and other similar 4 gatherings.” Lighthouse Fellowship Church v. Northam, __ F. Supp. 3d __, No. 2:20-5 cv-2040-AWA-RJK, 2020 WL 2110416, at *4–8 (E.D. Va. May 1, 2020) (denying 6 preliminary injunction), appeal docketed, No. 20-1515 (4th Cir. May 4, 2020). In 7 addition to holding that a plaintiff was not likely to succeed on the merits, the Eastern 8 District of Virginia held in another case that the balance of equities favored the State, 9 because “it is no exaggeration to recognize that the stakes for residents . . . are life-10 or-death.” Tolle v. Northam, No. 1:20-cv-00363-LMB-MSN, 2020 WL 1955281, at 11 *1–2 (E.D. Va. Apr. 8, 2020) (reaffirming and explaining legal basis for preliminary 12 injunction), motion for injunction pending appeal denied, No. 20-1419, ECF No. 14 13 (4th Cir. Apr. 28, 2020), petition for cert. docketed, No. 20-1419 (U.S. May 12, 14 2020).

15 Many other federal and state courts have reached similar conclusions when 16 evaluating challenges like this one. See, e.g., Elim Romanian Pentecostal Church v.
17 Pritzker, __ F. Supp. 3d __, No. 1:20-cv-2782, 2020 WL 2468194, at *2–4 (N.D. Ill.
18 May 13, 2020) (denying preliminary injunction), appeal docketed, No. 20-1811 (7th 19 Cir. May 14, 2020); Calvary Chapel of Bangor v. Mills, __ F. Supp. 3d __, No. 1:20-20 cv-156, 2020 WL 2310913, at *6–10 (D. Me. May 9, 2020) (denying TRO), appeal

5 Super. Ct. Mar. 25, 2020) (denying preliminary injunction).

6 In only two jurisdictions—the Sixth Circuit and the District of Kansas—have 7 courts deviated from the principles in those cases and issued injunctive relief in 8 religion-based challenges to COVID-19 orders. See Roberts v. Neace, __ F.3d __, 9 No. 20-5465, 2020 WL 2316679 (6th Cir. May 9, 2020) (per curiam order on motion 10 for injunction pending appeal); Maryville Baptist Church v. Beshear, __ F.3d __, No.
11 20-5427, 2020 WL 2111316 (6th Cir. May 2, 2020) (same); Tabernacle Baptist 12 Church v. Beshear, __ F. Supp. 3d __, No. 3:20-cv-33, 2020 WL 2305307 (E.D. Ky.
13 May 8, 2020); On Fire Christian Ctr. v. Fischer, __ F. Supp. 3d __, No. 3:20-cv-264, 14 2020 WL 1820249 (W.D. Ky. Apr. 11, 2020); First Baptist Church v. Kelly, __ F.
15 Supp. 3d __, No. 6:20-cv-1102, 2020 WL 1910021 (D. Kan. Apr. 18, 2020). But 16 these decisions are inconsistent with the law of this Circuit: They incorrectly held 17 that the compelling-interest test was applicable, because they erroneously analogized 18 in-person religious services to quite different nonreligious activities that pose lesser 19 risks of transmission of the virus, such as office work or walking down a store aisle.
20 Compare, e.g., Neace, __ F.3d __, 2020 WL 2316679, at *4, with Stormans II, 794 21 F.3d at 1079–82 (rejecting arguments that secular exemptions that were not 22 comparable to desired religious exemption could trigger strict scrutiny). Moreover, in 23 concluding that restrictions on large religious gatherings were not narrowly tailored 24 to preventing transmission of the virus, these cases ignored the obvious—that barring 25 large gatherings entirely is more likely to reduce transmission of COVID-19 than is 26 allowing large gatherings with attempts at social distancing. *Compare Ashcroft v.
27 ACLU*, 542 U.S. 656, 665 (2004) (under compelling-interest test, law is narrowly 28

1 tailored if “proposed alternatives will not be as effective” in achieving government’s 2 goal), with Neace, ___ F.3d ___, 2020 WL 2316679, at *4 (“Why not insist that the 3 congregants adhere to social-distancing and other health requirements and leave it at 4 that . . . ?”).

5 II. Abiding Place’s Religious-Freedom Claim Under the California 6 Constitution Fails.

7 Abiding Place’s free-exercise arguments fare no better when brought under 8 Article I, Section 4, of the California Constitution. As an initial matter, the Eleventh 9 Amendment prohibits federal courts from enjoining state officials to comply with 10 state law and thus bars Abiding Place’s claims against Governor Newsom. See 11 Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 106 (1984); Vasquez v.
12 Rackauckas, 734 F.3d 1025, 1041 (9th Cir. 2013). And with respect to defendant San 13 Diego County, Abiding Place has advanced no argument as to how an injunction 14 could be cabined so as to apply only to a municipality while still providing the relief 15 that Abiding Place seeks.

16 In all events, Abiding Place’s free-exercise claim under the California 17 Constitution would fail even if Abiding Place could get relief that it seeks from this 18 Court without running afoul of the Eleventh Amendment. Although the California 19 Supreme Court has not formally decided whether the Smith standard governs free-20 exercise claims under the California Constitution (see N. Coast Women’s Care Med.
21 Grp., Inc. v. Super. Ct., 189 P.3d 959, 968 (Cal. 2008)), it has historically “applied 22 the federal and state free exercise clauses interchangeably, without ascribing any 23 independent meaning to the state clause” (Catholic Charities of Sacramento, Inc. v.
24 Super. Ct., 85 P.3d 67, 90–91 (Cal. 2004))—strongly suggesting that Smith’s 25 rational-basis analysis also governs claims under Article I, Section 4. And the 26 California Court of Appeals, assuming without deciding that the compelling-interest 27 test applied to a challenge seeking a religious exemption from a mandatory-28

1 vaccination law, held that the free-exercise guarantee of the California Constitution
2 did not mandate the exemption. See Brown v. Smith, 235 Cal. Rptr. 3d 218, 224–25
3 (Cal. Ct. App. 2018); see also Love v. State Dep’t of Educ., 240 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861, 4 873 (Cal. Ct. App. 2018). Thus, the California Constitution provides Abiding Place 5 with no right to an exemption from public-health laws such as those here, regardless 6 of what standard of review is applied.

7 III. The Orders Do Not Violate The Establishment Clause, But Granting A 8 Religious Exemption Would.

9 The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment “mandates governmental 10 neutrality between religion and religion, and between religion and nonreligion.” 11 McCreary County v. ACLU of Ky., 545 U.S. 844, 860 (2005) (quoting Epperson v.
12 Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 104 (1968)). Because the challenged orders treat religious 13 gatherings like analogous nonreligious gatherings, Abiding Place is wrong in arguing 14 that the orders violate the Establishment Clause. Rather, granting Abiding Place the 15 religious exemption that it seeks would violate the Establishment Clause. For the 16 neutrality requirement of the First Amendment’s Religion Clauses forbids the 17 government not just to target religion for worse treatment (see Part I.A, supra) but 18 also to grant religious exemptions that would detrimentally affect nonbeneficiaries 19 (see Estate of Thornton, 472 U.S. at 709–10).

20 The rights to believe, or not, and to practice one’s faith, or not, are sacrosanct.
21 But they do not extend to imposing the costs and burdens of one’s beliefs on others.
22 For when government purports to accommodate the religious exercise of some by 23 shifting costs or burdens to others, it prefers the religion of the benefited over the 24 rights, beliefs, and interests of nonbeneficiaries, in violation of the Establishment 25 Clause. Exempting Abiding Place from the challenged orders would contravene this 26 settled constitutional rule.

1 a. In Estate of Thornton, for example, the U.S. Supreme Court invalidated a 2 law requiring employers to accommodate Sabbatarians in all instances, because “the 3 statute t[ook] no account of the convenience or interests of the employer or those of 4 other employees who do not observe a Sabbath.” 472 U.S. at 709–10. The Court held 5 that “unyielding weighting in favor of Sabbath observers over all other interests” has 6 “a primary effect that impermissibly advances a particular religious practice,” 7 violating the Establishment Clause. Id. at 710. Similarly, in Texas Monthly, Inc. v.
8 Bullock, the Court invalidated a sales-tax exemption for religious periodicals 9 because, among other defects, it unconstitutionally “burden[ed] nonbeneficiaries” by 10 making them bear costs “to offset the benefit bestowed on subscribers to religious 11 publications.” 498 U.S. 1, 18 n.8 (1989) (plurality opinion).

12 The Supreme Court’s pre-Smith Free Exercise Clause jurisprudence is 13 consistent with this principle, demonstrating that even under a heightened 14 compelling-interest standard, the First Amendment cannot require religious 15 exceptions that harm others. In Lee, the Court rejected an Amish employer’s request 16 for an exemption from paying Social Security taxes because the exemption would 17 “operate[] to impose the employer’s religious faith on the employees.” 455 U.S. at 18 261. In Braunfeld, the Court declined to grant an exemption from Sunday-closing 19 laws because it would have provided Jewish businesses with “an economic advantage 20 over their competitors who must remain closed on that day.” 366 U.S. at 608–09.
21 And in Prince, the Court denied a request for an exemption from child-labor laws to 22 allow minors to distribute religious literature because, while “[p]arents may be free to 23 become martyrs themselves . . . it does not follow [that] they are free, in identical 24 circumstances, to make martyrs of their children.” 321 U.S. at 170. In doing so, the 25 Court cited Jacobson and noted that case’s rejection of an exemption from 26 vaccination laws. Id. at 166 & n.12.

1 In short, a religious accommodation “must be measured so that it does not 2 override other significant interests” (Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 722 (2005))
3 and must not “impose substantial burdens on nonbeneficiaries” (Texas Monthly, 489 4 U.S. at 18 n.8 (plurality opinion)). When nonbeneficiaries would be unduly harmed, 5 religious exemptions are forbidden. Cutter, 544 U.S. at 720; Estate of Thornton, 472
6 U.S. at 709–10.

7 b. In only one narrow set of circumstances (in two cases) has the Supreme 8 Court ever upheld religious exemptions that materially burdened third parties—9 namely, when the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses together prohibited the 10 government from involving itself in the ecclesiastical structuring of religious 11 institutions. In Hosanna-Tabor Lutheran Evangelical Church & School v. EEOC, 12 565 U.S. 171, 194–95 (2012), the Court held that the Americans with Disabilities Act 13 could not be enforced in a way that would interfere with a church’s selection of its 14 ministers. And in Corporation of the Presiding Bishop v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327, 339–
15 40 (1987), the Court upheld, under Title VII’s statutory religious exemption, a 16 church’s firing of an employee who was not in religious good standing. These 17 exemptions did not amount to improper religious favoritism, and therefore were 18 permissible under the Establishment Clause, because both Religion Clauses limit 19 governmental intrusion into the internal organizational structure of churches.

20 This case does not implicate that narrow ecclesiastical-authority doctrine, 21 because Abiding Place’s challenge to California’s and San Diego’s public-health 22 measures does not present a question regarding “religious organizations[’] autonomy 23 in matters of internal governance” (Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 197 (Thomas, J., 24 concurring)). Rather, it presents the opposite question: whether there is a 25 constitutional right to put countless people outside of a religious gathering at greater 26 risk of exposure to a deadly virus.

1 c. Granting an exemption here would elevate Abiding Place’s religious beliefs 2 over the health of the entire community. For Abiding Place and other houses of 3 worship that are determined to ignore the challenged public-health measures do not 4 put only their members in danger. They also increase the risk of contagion for 5 everyone with whom their members come into contact, including the elderly, the 6 immunocompromised, and all others at elevated risk of severe illness.

7 California faces an unprecedented public-health emergency. As the U.S.
8 District Court for the Northern District of Illinois recognized, COVID-19 has already 9 killed more Americans “than the number of people who perished during the 9/11 10 terrorist attacks, Pearl Harbor, and the Battle of Gettysburg combined.” Cassell, 2020 11 WL 2112374, at *1. Though much about the virus remains unknown, what we do 12 know demands a strong response: “asymptomatic individuals may carry and spread 13 the virus, and there is currently no known vaccine or effective treatment.” Id.
14 Limiting permitted gatherings and activities will reduce contacts between people and 15 contaminated surfaces, slow the spread of the virus, and save lives.

16 If Abiding Place is instead permitted to ignore the challenged orders and host 17 in-person gatherings, everyone will be in greater danger of contracting the virus.
18 Religious gatherings are just as likely to spread COVID-19 as any other mass 19 gatherings, and the examples are tragically numerous. For example, officials in 20 Sacramento County traced roughly a third of that County’s first several hundred 21 cases back to church gatherings. Hilda Flores, One-third of COVID-19 cases in Sac
22 County tied to church gatherings, officials say, KCRA (Apr. 1, 2020), 23 <https://bit.ly/2XICpPu>. After a church-choir practice in Seattle—at which members 24 attempted to observe social-distancing and hygiene guidance—45 out of 60 attendees 25 fell ill, and two died. Richard Read, A choir decided to go ahead with rehearsal; Now
26 dozens of members have COVID-19 and two are dead, L.A. TIMES (Mar. 29, 2020), 27 <https://lat.ms/2yiLbU6>. A church service in West Virginia led to infections that 28

1 devastated a small community. Joe Severino, COVID-19 tore through a black Baptist
2 church community in WV; Nobody said a word about it, CHARLESTON GAZETTE-3 MAIL, <https://bit.ly/2SFVYyX>. And in Canada, a church service that complied with 4 social-distancing guidelines nonetheless led to an outbreak that infected half of those 5 present. Chris Epp, 'I would do anything for a do-over': Calgary church hopes 6 others learn from their tragic COVID-19 experience, CTV NEWS (updated May 11, 7 2020), <https://bit.ly/3dLUv2l>.

8 As these examples demonstrate, a single unwitting carrier at one gathering 9 could cause a ripple effect throughout the entire community: That one carrier might 10 pass the virus to his neighbors at the gathering, who might then return home and pass 11 it to their family members, including people at high risk of severe illness. If those 12 infected family members then go to the grocery store or the hospital, they may 13 potentially expose essential retail workers or healthcare providers, who may then do 14 the same to their families—and so on. And as more people get sick, more strain is 15 placed on the hospital system, putting healthcare workers at particular risk because of 16 shortages of personal protective equipment (see OEI-06-20-00300) and increasing 17 the chances that people will die due to lack of healthcare resources.

18 The Establishment Clause forbids the government to grant religious 19 exemptions for conduct that threatens to harm so many.
