INTEREST OF *AMICUS CURIAE

Americans United for Separation of Church and State is a national, nonsectarian public-interest organization that is committed to preserving the constitutional principles of religious freedom and the separation of religion and government. Americans United has long fought to uphold the guarantees of the First Amendment's Religion Clauses that government must not favor, disfavor, or punish based on religion or belief, and therefore that religious accommodations must not license maltreatment of, or otherwise detrimentally affect, third parties.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

New Jersey, along with most of the world, continues to face a devastating pandemic. The United States has more than 1.5 million confirmed cases of COVID-19 and almost 100,000 deaths—the most worldwide. See COVID-19 Dashboard, CTR. FOR SYS. SCI. & ENGINEERING AT JOHNS HOPKINS UNIV. (last visited May 26, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2xR2V99>. New Jersey currently has the second-highest number of reported cases and deaths in the country. See Coronavirus in the U.S.: Latest Map and Case Count, N.Y. TIMES (updated May 26, 2020), <https://nyti.ms/2X27IE6>. And the number of cases and the death toll in New Jersey are still climbing. See N.J. coronavirus death toll now at 11,191 with 155,764 total cases. Downward trend for outbreak continues., NJ.COM (May 26, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2zsEfVz>.

Though much about the virus remains unknown, what we do know—that the virus spreads through asymptomatic carriers, and that there is currently no known vaccine or effective treatment—demands decisive action from leaders at all levels of government. As part of New Jersey’s emergency statewide public-health response, Governor Phil Murphy has temporarily prohibited in-person gatherings that would put more than ten people in close proximity indoors, restricted the operations of many businesses that are permitted to remain open, and ordered residents to stay at home. See Executive Order No. 107 (Mar. 21, 2020), <https://bit.ly/3bWUS8I>; Executive Order No. 142 (May 13, 2020), <https://bit.ly/36nL3zy>. These temporary restrictions reduce contacts between people and with contaminated surfaces, slow the spread of the virus, and save lives. Indeed, reports from other regions suggest that orders of this type have been successful in limiting transmission of COVID-19. See, e.g., The State of Our State’s Coronavirus Fight, SEATTLE TIMES (Apr. 12, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2KtMqTq>; Rong-Gong Lin II, et al., Social distancing may have helped California slow the virus and avoid New York’s fate, L.A. TIMES (Mar. 31, 2020), <https://lat.ms/2VSbYih>.

While the Governor’s orders do temporarily limit the size of religious gatherings, Plaintiffs’ religious-exercise rights have not been violated. The Supreme Court has explained that neutral, generally applicable laws reflecting no discriminatory intent toward religion do not violate the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment. The restrictions here comply with this principle: The virus is just as likely to spread at religious events as at nonreligious ones, so the orders apply to all in-person gatherings equally, regardless of motivation. Indeed, the Governor's orders have affected all areas of New Jersey society. In fact, in conjunction with the Governor's orders, this Court has issued its own orders delaying criminal and civil jury trials through August 31, 2020. See Standing Order 2020-12 (May 22, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2ZFf4tx>.

The challenged orders are thus subject to rational-basis review. But even if heightened scrutiny were called for—which is not the case—the orders still should be upheld because they are narrowly tailored to advance New Jersey's compelling interest in protecting its residents from a deadly disease. As the Supreme Court has held, personal liberty is subject to reasonable, temporary restrictions to secure the health of the state during a public-health emergency.

What is more, the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment forbids granting the religious exemption that Plaintiffs seek. For if government imposes harms on third parties when it exempts religious exercise from the requirements of the law, it impermissibly favors the benefited religion and its adherents over the rights, interests, and beliefs of nonbeneficiaries. Holding that in-person religious gatherings must be exempted from the prohibition on gatherings would do just that: A single contagious person at a religious service may infect scores of fellow congregants, who may then expose family, friends, and strangers, including countless people who did not attend the service.

For reasons similar to those set forth here, the overwhelming majority of decisions—including orders by the Fourth, Seventh, and Ninth Circuits denying injunctions pending appeal—have rejected religion-based challenges to COVID-19-related public-health measures. Plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction should likewise be denied.

STATEMENT OF RELEVANT FACTS

On February 3, 2020, more than a month before New Jersey reported its first confirmed cases of COVID-19, Governor Murphy established a Coronavirus Task Force chaired by the New Jersey Department of Community Health to “coordinat[e] all State efforts to appropriately prepare for and respond to the public health hazard posed by the virus.” See Executive Order No. 102 (Feb. 3, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2AaLfWS>. By March 9, there were 500 reported cases and 22 confirmed deaths in the United States, with 11 “presumed positive” cases and 24 more under investigation in New Jersey. See Executive Order No. 103 (Mar. 9, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2M1zMLX>. On March 16, with 178 confirmed cases in the State, Governor Murphy issued Executive Order No. 104, which, pursuant to CDC guidelines: (1) limited social gatherings to 50 people; (2) closed public and private preschools and elementary and secondary schools, and restricted in-person instruction at institutions of higher learning; and (3) closed to the public numerous nonreligious institutions and businesses, including restaurants, gyms, casinos, and entertainment venues and centers. See Executive Order No. 104 (Mar. 16, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2LYfp2g>.

The number of cases nationwide and within the State grew apace. By the time Governor Murphy issued Executive Order No. 107, which is a subject of this suit, on March 21, there were more than 15,000 confirmed cases and 200 deaths in the United States and 890 reported cases, with at least 11 deaths, in New Jersey. See EO-107, supra. EO-107 followed CDC recommendations that individuals practice “social distancing”—“remaining out of congregate settings, avoiding mass gatherings, and maintaining distance (approximately 6 feet or 2 meters) from others when possible”—to prevent community spread of COVID-19, which happens “most frequently through person to person contact when individuals are within six feet or less of one another.” Id. The order therefore cancelled “gatherings of individuals, such as parties, celebrations, or other social events,” except where otherwise authorized. Id. ¶ 5. The orders did not single out houses of worship for disfavored treatment.

Indeed, COVID-19 has had a dramatic impact on the operations and activities of government, businesses, and other entities, including those of this Court. Chief Judge Wolfson has adopted several standing orders to assist in mitigating the devastating effects of this virus. On March 16, Chief Judge Wolfson announced visitor restrictions and postponed criminal and civil jury trials scheduled to begin before April 30. See Standing Order 20-02 (Mar. 16, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2X4paST>.

On May 22, the Court extended to August 31 the postponement of jury trials, the deadline for the government to file an indictment or information in criminal cases, and the “excluded time” for criminal defendants under the Speedy Trial Act. See Standing Order 2020-12, supra. In short, this public-health emergency has temporarily burdened the basic legal rights of criminal and civil litigants.

As described above, New Jersey now has more than 155,000 reported cases of COVID-19 and more than 11,000 deaths. See Coronavirus in the U.S., supra. But hospitalizations have decreased and the numbers of reported cases and deaths, while still growing, are on a downward trend. Hence, on May 13, Governor Murphy ordered that indoor gatherings of up to ten people be permitted. See EO-142 ¶ 8. And most recently, recognizing that “outdoor environments present reduced risks of transmission as compared to indoor environments,” Governor Murphy has loosened restrictions on outdoor gatherings, permitting in-person gatherings of up to 25 people, as long as they observe social-distancing requirements. See Executive Order No. 148 (May 22, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2XAY6ye>.

ARGUMENT

I. THE ORDERS DO NOT VIOLATE THE FREE EXERCISE CLAUSE.

A. Rational-Basis Review Applies To The Challenged Orders.

The freedom to worship in accordance with one’s spiritual needs is a right of the highest order; and it is natural that, in difficult and scary times like these, people will seek the comfort and support that their faith communities provide. But the legal guarantees of religious freedom have never provided absolute license to engage in conduct consistent with one’s religious beliefs. E.g., Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303–04 (1940). Plaintiffs nevertheless argue that the Free Exercise Clause entitles them to an exemption from the temporary, emergency public-health measures enacted by the Governor to combat a pandemic. That claim is wrong as a matter of law: Government may temporarily restrict individual rights to protect “against an epidemic of disease which threatens the safety of its [citizens].” Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 27 (1905). “The right to practice religion freely does not include liberty to expose the community . . . to a communicable disease.” Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 166–67 (1944).

The Supreme Court’s Free Exercise jurisprudence makes clear that while government cannot forbid a religious practice because it is religious, religion-based disagreement with the law does not excuse noncompliance. “To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land,” which would “in effect . . . permit every citizen to become a law unto himself.” Emp’t Div. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 879 (1990) (quoting Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 166–67 (1879)). The Supreme Court has therefore held that laws that burden religious conduct are constitutionally permissible—and need satisfy only rational-basis review—when they are neutral toward religion and apply generally. Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 531 (1993); Smith, 494 U.S. at 879.

The neutrality requirement means that a law must not “infringe upon or restrict practices because of their religious motivation.” Lukumi, 508 U.S. at 533 (emphasis added). The Free Exercise Clause thus bars discrimination against religion both facially and through “religious gerrymanders” that target specific religious conduct. Id. at 534. General applicability is the closely related concept (id. at 531) that government, “in pursuit of legitimate interests, cannot in a selective manner impose burdens only on conduct motivated by religious belief” (id. at 543). The touchstone for both inquiries is whether the government has discriminated against religious conduct. Id. at 533–34, 542–43.

New Jersey’s orders evince no hostility toward religion. They ban all indoor gatherings that would bring more than ten people together, whether for religious or secular activities. EO-107 ¶ 5; EO-142 ¶ 8. The Governor’s orders thus bar gathering for “parties, celebrations, or other social events.” EO-107 ¶ 5. And they close all “recreational and entertainment businesses” where large numbers of people gather, including gyms and fitness centers, movie theaters, performing-arts centers, nightclubs, indoor shopping malls, salons, libraries, and public and private social clubs. Id. ¶¶ 8, 9. But the orders do permit religious gatherings of up to ten people indoors and up to twenty-five people outdoors, and they likewise permit drive-in religious services in which worshippers remain in their vehicles. EO-142 ¶¶ 4–8; EO-148 ¶ 1.

That the orders allow some businesses and operations to continue does not negate general applicability. In this Circuit, a law fails the requirement of general applicability only if it establishes a “regime of individualized, discretionary exemptions” or “burdens a category of religiously motivated conduct but exempts or does not reach a substantial category of conduct that is not religiously motivated and that undermines the purposes of the law to at least the same degree as the covered conduct that is religiously motivated.” Blackhawk v. Pennsylvania, 381 F.3d 202, 209 (3d Cir. 2004). Hence, in Fraternal Order of Police Newark Lodge No. 12 v. City of Newark, 170 F.3d 359, 364–67 (3d Cir. 1999), the court of appeals held that a city’s policy of prohibiting police officers from wearing beards for religious reasons but allowing them for medical reasons was not neutral and generally applicable because the permitted secular exemption undermined the policy’s purpose of ensuring uniformity among officers’ appearances as much as the disallowed religious exemption would. And in Blackhawk, Pennsylvania’s refusal to waive a wildlife permit for the plaintiff, who kept bears for religious reasons, while waiving the fee for zoos and circuses, was not generally applicable because the exemptions for zoos and circuses equally undermined the state’s interests in bringing in money and discouraging the keeping of wild animals. 381 F.3d at 211.

Importantly, “[a] regulation does not automatically cease being neutral and generally applicable . . . simply because it allows certain secular behaviors but not certain religious behaviors.” Lighthouse Inst. For Evangelism, Inc. v. City of Long Branch, 510 F.3d 253, 265 (3d Cir. 2007). The “relevant question” is whether the government “pursued its aims evenhandedly, generally allowing the kinds of uses that would further the [law’s] goals and prohibiting the uses that would interfere with them.” Id. at 275–76. “Heightened scrutiny [is] warranted only when a principled distinction [cannot] be made between the prohibited religious behavior and its secular comparator in terms of their effects on the regulatory objectives.” Id. at 266. So in Lighthouse, a zoning ordinance disallowing houses of worship but allowing certain categories of secular assemblies in a given zone was generally applicable because the permitted secular uses were “likely to further [the city’s] aims” of revitalizing the area, “not harm them.” Id. at 276; see also King v. Governor of New Jersey, 767 F.3d 216, 242 (3d Cir. 2014) (law prohibiting counselors from engaging in “sexual orientation change efforts” was generally applicable, notwithstanding supposed exemptions allowing counseling regarding gender transition and counseling that “facilitates exploration and development of same-sex attractions,” because those permitted subjects were not “equally harmful to minors” and therefore were not comparable to the prohibited subject matter), abrogated on other grounds by Nat’l Inst. of Family & Life Advocates v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361 (2018).

That the Governor’s orders permit essential retail businesses—such as those providing grocery, pharmacy, medical, and other similar services (EO-107 ¶ 6)—to remain open to the public does not negate general applicability. The orders restrict religious and analogous nonreligious gatherings equally. EO-107 ¶ 5; EO-142 ¶¶ 4–

8. Nothing in the orders permits groups of more than ten people to congregate in essential retail businesses. See EO-107 ¶¶ 5–7; EO-142 ¶ 8. And in all events, allowing essential retail entities to operate does not “undermine[] the purposes of the law to at least the same degree as the covered conduct that is religiously motivated.” See Blackhawk, 381 F.3d at 209. The Governor made a “principled distinction” (Lighthouse, 510 F.3d at 266) between the public-health risks of walking through a retail store and those associated with sitting in a room with scores of people for an extended period. Research demonstrates that “events where people spen[d] a length of time in each others’ close company,” such as parties, funerals, and religious gatherings, pose a notably higher risk of spreading the virus than fleeting interactions. See Philip Oltermann, et al., The cluster effect: how social gatherings were rocket fuel for coronavirus, GUARDIAN (Apr. 9, 2020), <https://bit.ly/369Sb2B>; cf. Attorney General William P. Barr Issues Statement on Religious Practice and Social Distancing, U.S. Dep’t of Justice (Apr. 14, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2RIYzHO> (urging that religious gatherings be treated like gatherings at movie theaters, restaurants, and concert halls).

What is more, the permitted retail activities do not “harm” but instead “further [the] aims” of New Jersey to safeguard public health (Lighthouse, 510 F.3d at 276) by ensuring that people can obtain items essential to health and survival. If in combating the virus the Governor were to close grocery stores, pharmacies, gas stations, banks, medical suppliers, laundromats, and similar services, the health crisis would be exacerbated. Medical professionals' ability to treat COVID-19 patients would be impaired without supplies and reliable transportation, and the entire medical system would suffer greater strain from additional illness and injury caused by the public's inability to eat, treat existing illnesses, and maintain sanitary living conditions.

Nor is the general applicability of the orders undermined by permitting nonessential retail and other workplaces to carry out limited operations. See EO-142 ¶ 9. The orders continue to bar the public from entering nonessential retail businesses, which may open only for curbside pickup. See id. Again, fleeting transactions do not carry the same risk of transmission of COVID-19 as do sustained, in-person indoor gatherings. And while other types of non-retail businesses may remain open as necessary for their employees to perform their essential job functions, members of the public are not permitted to patronize those businesses. See EO-107 ¶¶ 2, 6; EO-142 ¶ 2. Moreover, like employees of other such entities, clergy and their staff may go to their houses of worship to carry out permitted functions. See EO-107 ¶¶ 2(5), (7). They, like any other enterprise, just cannot hold in-person, indoor gatherings of more than ten people. EO-142 ¶¶ 4–8.

Further, in defining different categories of businesses, the orders draw no distinctions based on religious views or motivations. Cf. Ungar v. N.Y.C. Hous. Auth., 363 F. App'x 53, 56 (2d Cir. 2010) (holding that limited categorical exceptions to public-housing policy did not negate general applicability because exceptions were equally available to religious and nonreligious applicants). Hospitals, food banks, and media organizations, for example, may remain open regardless of whether they have a religious affiliation. EO-107 ¶¶ 17–19.

Finally, the Governor’s recent decision to open beaches and similar outdoor spaces to the public, subject to strict social-distancing requirements (Executive Order No. 143 (May 14, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2AV5xnJ>), does not change things. Outdoor gatherings of more than 25 people are prohibited—whether for religious worship or recreation. Id. ¶ 3(g); EO-148 ¶ 1. And, in all events, Plaintiffs are seeking an exemption entitling them to hold indoor religious gatherings.

Simply put, “the right of free exercise does not relieve an individual of the obligation to comply with a ‘valid and neutral law of general applicability on the ground that the law proscribes (or prescribes) conduct that his religion prescribes (or proscribes).’” Smith, 494 U.S. at 879 (quoting United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 263 n.3 (1982) (Stevens, J., concurring in the judgment)). Plaintiffs’ religious beliefs do not afford a constitutional excuse for noncompliance.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs alternatively suggest that their free-exercise claim is subject to heightened scrutiny under a “hybrid-rights” theory (ECF No. 2-1, at 17). But as Plaintiffs themselves acknowledge, see id., the Third Circuit has never endorsed this theory or applied heightened scrutiny to constitutional claims because of it. See King, 767 F.3d at 243. In fact, it has on numerous occasions rejected this theory. See, e.g., id.; McTernan v. City of York, 564 F.3d 636, 647 n.5 (3d Cir. 2009) (“We have neither applied nor expressly endorsed a hybrid rights theory, and will not do so today.”); Combs v. Homer-Ctr. Sch. Dist., 540 F.3d 231, 247 (3d Cir. 2008) (“Until the Supreme Court provides direction, we believe the hybrid-rights theory to be dicta.”). This Court therefore should not entertain Plaintiffs’ hybrid-rights theory.

B. The Orders Would Satisfy Even A Compelling-Interest Test.

Even if the prohibition on in-person gatherings were subject to heightened scrutiny, which it isn't, Plaintiffs' free-exercise claim would still fail. More than a century of constitutional jurisprudence demonstrates that neutral restrictions on religious exercise tailored to containing contagious diseases withstand a compelling-interest test.

Before its decision in Smith in 1990, the Supreme Court interpreted the Free Exercise Clause to require application of the compelling-interest test whenever religious exercise was substantially burdened by governmental action. See, e.g., Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 407 (1963); see also 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb(b) (stating that purpose of federal Religious Freedom Restoration Act was “to restore the compelling interest test as set forth in” Sherbert and Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205 (1972)). But even the Court's pre-Smith free-exercise decisions repeatedly acknowledged that there is no right to religious exemptions from laws, like the orders here, that shield the public from serious disease.

1. The orders serve a compelling governmental interest.

Government has a compelling interest in protecting the health and safety of the public in general and in preventing the spread of communicable diseases in particular. See Sherbert, 374 U.S. at 402–03; accord Yoder, 406 U.S. at 230 & n.20. “[P]owers on the subject of health and quarantine [have been] exercised by the states from the beginning.” Compagnie Francaise de Navigation a Vapeur v. La. Bd. of Health, 186 U.S. 380, 396–97 (1902). On that basis, the Supreme Court more than a century ago upheld a mandatory-vaccination law aimed at stopping the spread of smallpox. See Jacobson, 197 U.S. at 25 (citing “the authority of a state to enact quarantine laws and ‘health laws of every description’”). The Court straightforwardly rejected the idea that the Constitution bars compulsory measures to protect health, citing the “fundamental principle” that personal liberty is subject to restraint “in order to secure the . . . health . . . of the state.” Id. at 26 (quoting Hannibal & St. Joseph R.R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U.S. 465, 471 (1877)). Because “a community has the right to protect itself against an epidemic of disease which threatens the safety of its members,” individual rights are subject to reasonable restrictions—especially during a public-health emergency like the one that we now face. See Jacobson, 197 U.S. at 27; cf. United States v. Pitt, 144 F.2d 169, 171 (3d Cir. 1944) (“This does not mean that the Constitution was suspended for the duration of the emergency, but that the conditions which faced the United States at the time the [law] was passed must play a cogent part in determining any question related to its constitutionality.”).

The Supreme Court has repeatedly reaffirmed that public-health regulations that burden religious exercise withstand a compelling-interest inquiry. See Sherbert, 374 U.S. at 402–03 (citing mandatory vaccinations in Jacobson as example of burden on religion that satisfies compelling-interest test); Yoder, 406 U.S. at 230; see also Prince, 321 U.S. at 166–67. And lower federal courts have consistently recognized that the government has a compelling interest in preventing the spread of communicable disease. See, e.g., McCormick v. Stalder, 105 F.3d 1059, 1061 (5th Cir. 1997) (“[T]he prison’s interest in preventing the spread of tuberculosis, a highly contagious and deadly disease, is compelling.”); Whitlow v. California, 203 F. Supp. 3d 1079, 1089–90 (S.D. Cal. 2016) (collecting cases); see also Nikolao v. Lyon, 875 F.3d 310, 316 (6th Cir. 2017) (noting, in case involving statutory exemptions from vaccination law, that “[c]onstitutionally, [plaintiff] has no right to an exemption”).

There can be no doubt that New Jersey has a compelling interest in stanching the spread of COVID-19. And that interest calls for limiting all large gatherings, including religious ones, so as not to undermine governmental efforts to reduce transmission.

2. The orders are narrowly tailored.

A compelling-interest test, if it applied, would also consider whether the challenged orders are narrowly tailored to the governmental interest at stake. E.g., Globe Newspaper Co. v. Super. Ct., 457 U.S. 596, 607 (1982). Narrow tailoring does not, however, demand “perfect tailoring.” Williams-Yulee v. Fla. Bar, 575 U.S. 433, 454 (2015). Even “[a] complete ban can be narrowly tailored . . . if each activity within the proscription’s scope is . . . appropriately targeted.” Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 487 (1988); accord, e.g., Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 628–29 (1984) (ban on all gender discrimination narrowly tailored to combating evil of gender discrimination). Accordingly, the Supreme Court (see Sherbert, 374 U.S. at 403 (citing Jacobson, 197 U.S. at 26–27)) and many other courts (see, e.g., Whitlow, 203 F. Supp. 3d at 1089–90 (collecting cases)) have concluded that blanket prohibitions on refusing immunizations satisfy a compelling-interest test.

Governor Murphy’s orders operate in the same way. No vaccine for COVID-19 yet exists, and hospitals nationwide have experienced “severe shortages of testing supplies and extended waits for test results.” See CHRISTI A. GRIMM, U.S. DEP’T OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., HOSPITAL EXPERIENCES RESPONDING TO THE COVID-19 PANDEMIC 3 (Apr. 2020), <https://bit.ly/2VTEMIIm>. Without the capacity to test comprehensively for the virus, New Jersey cannot tailor its restrictions solely to those residents who have been diagnosed as having the virus. So temporarily restricting the size of in-person gatherings and enforcing social distancing and hygiene in permitted activities is the only way for the State to achieve its compelling interest in safeguarding the lives and health of its residents. The orders are no broader than necessary to ensure that the targeted activities—sustained physical gatherings of large numbers of people that create a significant risk of transmission of the virus—are curtailed.

To suggest, as Plaintiffs do, that the orders are not narrowly tailored because in-person mass gatherings could be carried out with social-distancing measures in place ignores the obvious: Barring large gatherings entirely is more likely to reduce transmission of COVID-19 than is permitting large gatherings with attempts at social distancing. Under the compelling-interest test, a law is narrowly tailored if “proposed alternatives will not be as effective” in achieving the state’s goal. See Ashcroft v. ACLU, 542 U.S. 656, 665 (2004). That is the case here. For example, churches in Texas and Georgia that had reopened recently had to close again after church leaders and members contracted the virus at church despite social-distancing measures. Lateshia Beachum, Two churches reclose after faith leaders and congregants get coronavirus, WASH. POST (May 19, 2020), <https://wapo.st/2WQgW0x>. Similarly, a church service in Canada that complied with social-distancing guidelines nonetheless led to an outbreak that infected half of those present. Chris Epp, ‘I would do anything for a do-over’: Calgary church hopes others learn from their tragic COVID-19 experience, CTV NEWS (updated May 11, 2020), <https://bit.ly/3dLUv2l>.

C. The Vast Majority Of Courts To Consider Similar Free-Exercise Challenges To COVID-19-Related Orders Have Rejected Them.

For reasons similar to those explained above, numerous decisions around the country—including orders of the Fourth, Seventh, and Ninth Circuits denying injunctions pending appeal—have rejected challenges like this one. For example, the Seventh Circuit recently explained in denying a motion for injunction pending appeal:

[Illinois’] Executive Order 2020-32 responds to an extraordinary public health emergency. The Executive Order does not discriminate against religious activities, nor does it show hostility toward religion. It appears instead to impose neutral and generally applicable rules . . . . [Its] temporary numerical restrictions on public gatherings apply not only to worship services but also to the most comparable types of secular gatherings, such as concerts, lectures, theatrical performances, or choir practices, in which groups of people gather together for extended periods, especially where speech and singing feature prominently and raise risks of transmitting the COVID-19 virus. Worship services do not seem comparable to secular activities permitted under the Executive Order, such as shopping, in which people do not congregate or remain for extended periods.

Elim Romanian Pentecostal Church v. Pritzker, No. 20-1811, 2020 WL 2517093, at *1 (7th Cir. May 16, 2020) (per curiam) (Easterbrook, Kanne, & Hamilton, JJ.) (citation omitted), denying motion for injunction pending appeal of ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, No. 1:20-cv-2782, 2020 WL 2468194 (N.D. Ill. May 13, 2020). And as the Ninth Circuit put it in denying a motion for injunction pending appeal: “We’re dealing here with a highly contagious and often fatal disease for which there presently is no known cure. . . . [I]f a ‘[c]ourt does not temper its doctrinaire logic with a little practical wisdom, it will convert the constitutional Bill of Rights into a suicide pact.’” S. Bay United Pentecostal Church v. Newsom, ___ F.3d ___, No. 20-55533, ECF No. 29, at 3 (9th Cir. May 22, 2020) (second alteration in original) (quoting Terminiello v. City of Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 37 (1949) (Jackson, J., dissenting)).

In another case in which the Ninth Circuit denied a motion for an injunction pending appeal, a California district court held that because challenged state and local “orders apply to both religious and secular gatherings, they do not discriminate, and are therefore facially neutral.” Gish v. Newsom, No. 5:20-cv-755, 2020 WL 1979970, at *5–6 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 23, 2020), motion for injunction pending appeal denied, No. 20-55445, ECF No. 21 (9th Cir. May 7, 2020). Further, in a case in which the Fourth Circuit denied a motion for injunction pending appeal, a Virginia district court held not only that the plaintiff was unlikely to succeed on the merits but also that the balance of equities favored the state because “it is no exaggeration to recognize that the stakes for residents . . . are life-or-death.” Tolle v. Northam, No. 1:20-cv-363, 2020 WL 1955281, at *1–2 (E.D. Va. Apr. 8, 2020), motion for injunction pending appeal denied, No. 20-1419, ECF No. 14 (4th Cir. Apr. 28, 2020), petition for cert. docketed, No. 19-1283 (U.S. May 12, 2020).<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Many other federal and state courts have reached similar conclusions when evaluating challenges like this one. See, e.g., Antietam Battlefield KOA v. Hogan, ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, No. 1:20-cv-1130, 2020 WL 2556496, at *7–10, 12–14 (D. Md. May 20, 2020), appeal docketed, No. 20-1579 (May 22, 2020); Spell v. Edwards, ___ F. Northam*, No. CL 20-415 (Va. Cir. Ct. Russell Cty. Apr. 14, 2020); Hotze

In only a few jurisdictions—principally the Sixth Circuit and courts within it—has any injunctive relief been granted in religion-based challenges to COVID-19 orders. See Roberts v. Neace, ___ F.3d ___, No. 20-5465, 2020 WL 2316679 (6th Cir. May 9, 2020) (per curiam order on motion for injunction pending appeal); *Maryville Baptist Church v. But those decisions incorrectly concluded that the compelling-interest test applied to the orders at issue based on categorical exemptions for nonreligious activities—such as office work or walking down a store aisle (see, e.g., Neace, ___ F.3d ___, 2020 WL 2316679, at *4)—that are quite different from religious gatherings and pose lesser risks of transmission of the virus. See supra Section I.A.2. And in determining that the restrictions were not narrowly tailored (see, e.g., Neace, ___ F.3d ___, 2020 WL 2316679, at *4), those cases incorrectly ignored the fact that social-distancing measures are less effective

Meanwhile, a recent Fifth Circuit order granting a partial injunction pending appeal did not make clear whether it was based on constitutional grounds, state statutory grounds, or preemption by a state order of the challenged local order. *Compare First Pentecostal Church v. ## II. THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE FORBIDS THE REQUESTED EXEMPTION.

The rights to believe, or not, and to practice one’s faith, or not, are sacrosanct. But they do not extend to imposing the costs and burdens of one’s beliefs on others. The First Amendment’s Religion Clauses “mandate[ ] governmental neutrality between religion and religion, and between religion and nonreligion.” McCreary County v. ACLU of Ky., 545 U.S. 844, 860 (2005) (quoting Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 104 (1968)). That neutrality requirement not only forbids government to target religion for worse treatment (see Part I.A, supra) but also prohibits granting religious exemptions that would detrimentally affect nonbeneficiaries (see Estate of Thornton v. Caldor, Inc., 472 U.S. 703, 709–10 (1985)). For when government purports to accommodate the religious exercise of some by shifting costs or burdens to others, it prefers the religion of the benefited over the rights, beliefs, and interests of nonbeneficiaries, in violation of the Establishment Clause.

In Estate of Thornton, for example, the U.S. Supreme Court invalidated a law requiring employers to accommodate Sabbatarians in all instances, because “the statute t[ook] no account of the convenience or interests of the employer or those of other employees who do not observe a Sabbath.” 472 U.S. at 709–10. The Court held that “unyielding weighting in favor of Sabbath observers over all other interests” has “a primary effect that impermissibly advances a particular religious practice,” violating the Establishment Clause. Id. at 710. Similarly, in Texas Monthly, Inc. v. Bullock, the Court invalidated a sales-tax exemption for religious periodicals because, among other defects, it unconstitutionally “burden[ed] nonbeneficiaries” by making them pay “to offset the benefit bestowed on subscribers to religious publications.” 489 U.S. 1, 18 n.8 (1989) (plurality opinion).

The Supreme Court’s pre-Smith Free Exercise Clause jurisprudence is consistent, demonstrating that religious exemptions that harm others cannot be required even under a compelling-interest test. In United States v. Lee, the Court rejected an Amish employer’s request for an exemption from paying social-security taxes because the exemption would have “operate[d] to impose the employer’s religious faith on the employees.” 455 U.S. at 261. In Braunfeld v. Brown, the Court declined to grant an exemption from Sunday-closing laws because it would have provided Jewish businesses with “an economic advantage over their competitors who must remain closed on that day.” 366 U.S. 599, 608–09 (1961). And in Prince, the Court denied a request for an exemption from child-labor laws to allow a minor to distribute religious literature because of the danger that it would have posed to the child's welfare. 321 U.S. at 170. That is because "[r]eal liberty for all could not exist under the operation of a principle which recognizes the right of each individual person to use his own [liberty] . . . regardless of the injury that may be done to others." Jacobson, 197 U.S. at 26.

In short, a religious accommodation "must be measured so that it does not override other significant interests" (Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 722 (2005)) and must not "impose substantial burdens on nonbeneficiaries" (Texas Monthly, 489 U.S. at 18 n.8 (plurality opinion)). When nonbeneficiaries would be unduly harmed, religious exemptions are forbidden. Cutter, 544 U.S. at 720; Estate of Thornton, 472 U.S. at 709–10.

In only one narrow set of circumstances (in two cases) has the Supreme Court ever upheld religious exemptions that materially burdened third parties—namely, when core Establishment and Free Exercise Clause protections for the ecclesiastical authority of religious institutions required the exemption. In Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church & School v. EEOC, 565 U.S. 171, 194–95 (2012), the Court held that the Americans with Disabilities Act could not be enforced in a way that would interfere with a church's selection of its ministers. And in Corporation of the Presiding Bishop v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327, 339–40 (1987), the Court upheld, under Title VII's statutory religious exemption, a church's firing of an employee who was not in religious good standing. These exemptions did not amount to impermissible religious favoritism, and therefore were permissible under the Establishment Clause, because both Religion Clauses limit governmental intrusion into the internal organizational structure of churches.

This case does not implicate that special protection for ecclesiastical authority because it does not present questions regarding “religious organizations[’] autonomy in matters of internal governance.” Hosanna-Tabor, 565 U.S. at 197 (Thomas, J., concurring). Rather, it presents a far different question: whether there is a constitutional right to put countless people outside the church at greater risk of exposure to deadly disease.

Granting an exemption here would elevate Plaintiffs’ religious preferences over the health of the entire community. By holding religious gatherings, Plaintiffs would not only put their members in danger but also increase the risk of contagion for everyone with whom they come into contact, including children, the elderly, and others at the highest risk of severe illness.

If New Jersey is forced to exempt large, in-person, indoor religious gatherings, everyone will be in greater danger of contracting the virus. Religious gatherings are just as likely as any other gathering to spread COVID-19, and the examples have sadly piled up across the country. Officials in Sacramento County, California, for example, traced roughly a third of the county’s first several hundred cases back to church gatherings. Hilda Flores, One-third of COVID-19 cases in Sac County tied to church gatherings, officials say, KCRA (Apr. 1, 2020, 2:55 PM), <https://bit.ly/2XlCpPu>. After a church-choir practice in Washington State—at which members attempted to observe hygiene guidance—45 out of 60 attendees fell ill, and two tragically died. Richard Read, A choir decided to go ahead with rehearsal; Now dozens of members have COVID-19 and two are dead, L.A. TIMES (Mar. 29, 2020), <https://lat.ms/2yiLbU6>. A single church event in Louisville was “linked to at least 28 cases . . . and two deaths.” Bailey Loosemore & Mandy McLaren, Kentucky county ‘hit really, really hard’ by church revival that spread deadly COVID-19, LOUISVILLE COURIER JOURNAL (updated Apr. 2, 2020), <https://bit.ly/2XkKCnd>. And a church service in West Virginia led to a cluster of infections that devastated a small community. Joe Severino, COVID-19 tore through a black Baptist church community in WV; Nobody said a word about it, CHARLESTON GAZETTE-MAIL, <https://bit.ly/2SFVYyX>. See also supra p. 18 (describing additional COVID-19 outbreaks stemming from religious services).

As these examples demonstrate, a single unwitting carrier at a worship service could cause a ripple effect throughout the entire community: That one carrier might pass the virus to his neighbors in the pews, who might then return home and pass it to their family members, including people at high risk of severe illness. If those infected family members then go to the doctor’s office, or to the grocery store for milk, they may potentially expose others, who may then do the same to their families—and so on. And the more people who get sick, the more strain is placed on the hospital system, and the greater the chance that people die due to lack of healthcare resources.

The Establishment Clause forbids the government to grant religious exemptions for conduct that threatens so much harm to so many.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction should be denied.

Respectfully submitted,
